At the young age of 23, Stacy Chung is often described to be more mature than people her age. She works as an Active Living Coach at the NYSC and is passionate amongst her fellow team members. Stacy developed a keen interest in working with the elderly while in high school volunteering at a nursing home. From this experience she knew exactly what she wanted to pursue as her career. Stacy went to study Kinesiology and Health Sciences at Western University and she began working full-time at the NYSC right after graduation. Although it has only been 2 years since Stacy started working at the NYSC, she feels like it is her second home, and has developed a tight-knit relationship with many of her colleagues and members. Since Stacy works at the NYSC every day of the working week, she has met most of the active members, and is very close to the frequent participants. Her relationships with NYSC members are very important to her, she has created bonds with many of them, going as far as colour coordinating outfits with some of the female members.

Stacy has a close relationship with her parents and younger brother. She currently lives at home with her parents while her younger brother is in school at Waterloo. Although she can afford to move out, Stacy prefers not to as she appreciates the company her parents can provide. She enjoys periodically cooking nutritious and wholesome meals, and pays close attention to nutritional facts of the ingredients she purchases. Being very conscious about her personal health, Stacy frequently exercises in her free time. She especially enjoys going for a run with her dog through the local park in the morning.

Stacy loves the time she spends at the NYSC. She works around 35 hours weekly, but sometimes will stay overnight while planning and preparing for the events of the next day. Stacy's main responsibilities include being in charge of the registration process, planning events, and handling NYSC's finances. She will occasionally oversee the status of the fitness programs as well as belly dancing. Her responsibilities also include training new volunteers and helping new members get to know the center better.

Stacy is a keen learner, and enjoys learning more about current technology. Her brother, a computer science undergraduate, helps her understand and adjust to newer technology. She loves to read books on her tablet when she has the time. She is also connected and well versed with social networking sites as she believes it will improve her networking skills. She has her own personal laptop for her business usage, and shares a desktop at home with her family for personal use. Apart from computers and tablets, Stacy also has a keen interest in photography. She has been a proud owner of a Sony RX100 camera, and brings it along with her to photograph anything she finds beautiful or interesting.

The NYSC has enriched Stacy's life immensely, and she is passionate about expanding the Centre's accessibility and outreach to others in the community. As all of the membership and class registrations are done through pen and paper, Stacy must commit a significant amount of time processing and filing applications. Her goal is to utilize technology to reduce the manual labour involved in registration so that she can invest her time elsewhere. An online registration system would allow administrative staff, such as herself, to be able to create new exciting events and notify upcoming programs to other members in the convenience and comfort of their homes. This, she believes, would minimize the long uncomfortable lineups members have associated with early registration. Additionally, it would make the organization more professional, and convenient to both those who work at the NYSC, and those take part in all it has to offer.
